Yohancé Liadi AaronFall 2013*PIN#:Responses to Reinstatement QuestionsWhat issues contributed to your academic difficulties?

The issues that have contributed to my academic difficulties are a slight lack of focus and a minor mishandling of personal issues. Even though these were issues for me at the time of academic dismissal, I have since found ways to handle these problems. Despite these two academic difficulties, I was able to raise my semester GPA to a 2.65 and my cumulative GPA from a 1.666 to a 1.745 after my first semester back at the University of Maryland College Park. Because I was enrolled as a part-time student with a part-time job schedule, I could not register for enough classes to boost my GPA above the 2.0 mark. I will discuss my success this semester further in the next question.

What steps have you taken to resolve these issues?*

When I came back to the University of Maryland College Park, I knew immediately that I was in a hole academically with a GPA below a 2.0 and that I needed to grab a shovel and start digging out of it. The fact of the time was that I had major rebuilding to do if I was going to be academically successful again. I felt compelled to address all my academic issues head on because I couldn't stand being a painful disappointment to myself and to all of those who played an instrumental role and were caring figures to me. The urgency of the moment was pressing and I didn't like the position that I was in. I went to work on ensuring that I had more than sufficient time to dedicate to my studies while at the same time tackling work and engaging in a social life. I did this by organizing my activities daily by priority (academics and work) first and then worrying about social entertainment later. The next issue that I wanted to fix was the neglect of academic resources. I didn't want to make the same mistake previously at the university again during my first semester back since dismissal. I was successful in communicating better with OMSE (Office of Multi-Ethnic Student Education). Because the work load during the fall semester was light, it was easier for me to focus on one course at a time and identify problem areas academically sooner than before. Due to my early action to identify and solve problems alongside improved communication with people who were able to guide me, I was extremely excited to see progress on my academic work. My boost in GPA and hard work reflected my true capabilities.

Naturally, I became more excited to complete my assignments. This reminded me of what I had already achieved--attaining an Associate's Degree for Foreign Language. In terms of addressing personal issues, I was very fortunate to be around a supportive family, a caring staff at OMSE, and peers who gave me encouragement. Being that I had this social support system, my academic success was undoubtedly certain. It is this personal story of triumph that is still motivating me to continue building on my success if given the chance of reinstatement for a second time at the University of Maryland College Park.

As identified in question one, a slight lack of focus and a minor mishandling of personal issues were the primary contributors to my academic difficulties during the Fall 2012 semester. As I had done when I came back to UMCP, if I was successfully reinstated, I moved quickly in order to prevent this from continuing to be an issue by organizing my daily activities according to priority. Another significant factor that caused me trouble and led to academic difficulty previously was failure on my part to fully utilize all of the university's academic resources. I am proud to say that I made use of necessary academic resources that could pave the way for my success this past Fall. As I prepared myself for academic success, I increased my communication and improved my relationship with tutors from the Office of Multi-Ethnic Student Education (OMSE) and the Department of Spanish Language. Just as I had known that the goal of attaining an Associate of Arts Degree for Foreign Language was right around the corner, my enthusiasm and hunger for success is motivating me toward attaining a Bachelor of Art's Degree in Spanish Language and Literature.
